Imaginary Amie already told you about all the NFFTY goings-on this weekend, but if you just can't get enough youth cinema, there's one more film event you might want to check out this weekend: the Environmental Justice in Action Network Film Festival. The clunky name covers a very cool program sponsored by Reel Grrls and a bunch of other local organizations. High school students spend a year learning media production skills and studying environmental justice issues. At the end of the program, they get one week to use those skills to make short films about environmental justice topics like healthy food and safe cosmetics.

On April 27, there will be a screening of eight of these short films, with presentations by the young filmmakers themselves. FREE tickets are available at the Intiman box office, and doors open at 6 p.m. There will be FREE sammies from Marination Station before the show. Who knows? You might discover the next Sofia Coppola.

Imaginary Fun!

The Imaginary Zine is a 60-page old school printed zine recounting our first 10 years with some of our favorite blog posts and stories from our imaginary friends. It is extremely limited with only 333 handcrafted zines made.

It also includes a cd chock full of rare, live, or exclusive songs by some of our favorite local artists, including The Long Winters, BOAT, Tullycraft, Exohxo, Tennis Pro, Math & Physics Club and many more!
